Whether you have already voted or will be going to a polling place today, we are all watching and waiting for the results of a highly emotional national election. As President Murray urged in her email to the community yesterday, “take care of yourselves and others, and practice empathy and grace with both those who share your views and those who do not.”

Today and over the next week, there are opportunities for our community members to discuss the election and find safe spaces to process the questions and concerns created throughout the campaign and by its outcome.

- The Whitman Debate Team invites anyone interested to join their Microsoft Teams channel.
- The government department has set up a live Twitter chat on Monday, Nov. 2, at 5 p.m.
- Comprehensive Healthcare will provide in-person and virtual counseling appointments for faculty and staff on Monday, Nov. 2.
- Process and Perry, Maya Angelou Presidential Chair at Wake Forest University, will present “Understanding 2020: A Faculty, Nov. 4, at 3 p.m.
- ASWC shared two articles for recommended reading: “5 Ways to Manage Politically Induced Stress” and “The Neuroscience of Gratitude and How It Affects Anxiety & Grief.”
- Blog post on political healthy discussion resources from the Scholars Strategy Network, Nancy Thomas of Tufts University
- Understanding 2020/2023 in the journal n + 1.

Whether you have already voted or will be going to a polling place today, we are all watching and waiting for the results of a highly emotional national election. As President Murray urged in her email to the community yesterday, “take care of yourselves and others, and practice empathy and grace with both those who share your views and those who do not.”

Today and over the next week, there are opportunities for our community members to discuss the election and find safe spaces to process the questions and concerns created throughout the campaign and by its outcome.

- The Whitman Debate Team invites anyone interested to join their Microsoft Teams channel.
- The government department has set up a live Twitter chat on Monday, Nov. 2, at 5 p.m.
- Comprehensive Healthcare will provide in-person and virtual counseling appointments for faculty and staff on Monday, Nov. 2.
- Process and Perry, Maya Angelou Presidential Chair at Wake Forest University, will present “Understanding 2020: A Faculty, Nov. 4, at 3 p.m.
- ASWC shared two articles for recommended reading: “5 Ways to Manage Politically Induced Stress” and “The Neuroscience of Gratitude and How It Affects Anxiety & Grief.”
- Blog post on political healthy discussion resources from the Scholars Strategy Network, Nancy Thomas of Tufts University
- Understanding 2020/2023 in the journal n + 1.

Whether you have already voted or will be going to a polling place today, we are all watching and waiting for the results of a highly emotional national election. As President Murray urged in her email to the community yesterday, “take care of yourselves and others, and practice empathy and grace with both those who share your views and those who do not.”

Today and over the next week, there are opportunities for our community members to discuss the election and find safe spaces to process the questions and concerns created throughout the campaign and by its outcome.

- The Whitman Debate Team invites anyone interested to join their Microsoft Teams channel.
- The government department has set up a live Twitter chat on Monday, Nov. 2, at 5 p.m.
- Comprehensive Healthcare will provide in-person and virtual counseling appointments for faculty and staff on Monday, Nov. 2.
- Process and Perry, Maya Angelou Presidential Chair at Wake Forest University, will present “Understanding 2020: A Faculty, Nov. 4, at 3 p.m.
- ASWC shared two articles for recommended reading: “5 Ways to Manage Politically Induced Stress” and “The Neuroscience of Gratitude and How It Affects Anxiety & Grief.”
- Blog post on political healthy discussion resources from the Scholars Strategy Network, Nancy Thomas of Tufts University
- Understanding 2020/2023 in the journal n + 1.

Whether you have already voted or will be going to a polling place today, we are all watching and waiting for the results of a highly emotional national election. As President Murray urged in her email to the community yesterday, “take care of yourselves and others, and practice empathy and grace with both those who share your views and those who do not.”

Today and over the next week, there are opportunities for our community members to discuss the election and find safe spaces to process the questions and concerns created throughout the campaign and by its outcome.

- The Whitman Debate Team invites anyone interested to join their Microsoft Teams channel.
- The government department has set up a live Twitter chat on Monday, Nov. 2, at 5 p.m.
- Comprehensive Healthcare will provide in-person and virtual counseling appointments for faculty and staff on Monday, Nov. 2.
- Process and Perry, Maya Angelou Presidential Chair at Wake Forest University, will present “Understanding 2020: A Faculty, Nov. 4, at 3 p.m.
- ASWC shared two articles for recommended reading: “5 Ways to Manage Politically Induced Stress” and “The Neuroscience of Gratitude and How It Affects Anxiety & Grief.”
- Blog post on political healthy discussion resources from the Scholars Strategy Network, Nancy Thomas of Tufts University
- Understanding 2020/2023 in the journal n + 1.