Over the summer, senior English and art major Elie Flanagan collaborated on an art piece for the “Over 50/Under 30” show at Fogue Gallery in Seattle. Flanagan and her supervisor decided to focus on generationally defining events, specifically, the epidemics that each generation has faced over the past hundred years, and the way attitudes from each echo throughout our current experience within the COVID-19 pandemic.

Flanagan describes the project as undeniably morbid but also incredibly helpful in understanding the variety of responses people have had to the coronavirus pandemic. In a post on the Whitman Internship Grant blog, Flanagan details both the art project itself as well as some of the personal aspects that went into creating it and some of the insights gained through the learning and research process.

COVID-19 Case on Campus
Positive COVID-19 cases in our campus community are noted in Whitman Today in compliance with state regulations. We also update the data in our COVID-19 Dashboard every Monday.

In accordance with Washington state Labor & Industries employer requirements, you are working in a location that is currently considered high risk and as such, a person with Whitman access was confirmed positive for COVID-19. This person may have been in contact with you in accordance with our campus COVID-19 guidelines. Though the likelihood of transmission is low due to our campus COVID-19 protocols, it is possible that others may have been exposed to COVID-19. There is nothing you need to do at this time aside from following our campus COVID-19 protocols. Anyone identified through the contact tracing process as a close contact (within 6 ft. for at least 15 minutes over 24 hours) will be personally notified.
